STATE ACTION . NATIONAL CHANGE.

CONNECTICUT REPORT CARD

The human trafficking law requires the predicate crime of coercion, narrowing its application. Buyer laws have weak penalties, unlikely to seriously deter demand. Advances in victim protection through immunity and presumptions need wrap-around protective provisions to respond appropriately to the child victims of sex trafficking.

CRIMINALIZATION OF DOMESTIC MINOR SEX TRAFFICKING

Connecticut's human trafficking law includes the crime of sex trafficking, but it requires the predicate crime of coercion for all cases of human trafficking and does not clearly define a human trafficking victim as a minor under the age of 18 used in commercial sex acts regardless of the use of force, fraud, or coercion. The state commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) laws include: promoting prostitution of a minor under 18, employing a minor in an obscene performance, enticing a minor to engage in prostitution, and aggravated sexual assault of a minor. Connecticut's CSEC statutes do not refer to the human trafficking statute for prosecution or victim protections.

CRIMINAL PROVISIONS ADDRESSING DEMAND

Limited options exist to prosecute demand. The state human trafficking law does not appear to apply to buyers, unless they are also guilty of the predicate crime of coercion. No CSEC laws include the crime of buying sex with a minor, unless the buyer uses the Internet and can then be prosecuted under the felony of enticing a minor under 16 to engage in prostitution via the Internet. Connecticut's patronizing a prostitute statute does not distinguish between purchasing commercial sex acts with an adult versus a minor. There is no prohibition on an age mistake defense to prosecution for a CSEC offense, leaving open a claim by buyers that they did not know the age of the victim, although a defense that the person solicited could not engage in prostitution because they are in fact a victim is not permitted. A buyer may be required to pay victim restitution in any criminal sentence in which it is requested and losses are proven. Buyers convicted of possessing child pornography or enticing a minor under 16 via the Internet to engage in prostitution must register as sex offenders, but registration is not required for patronizing a prostitute even when a minor is involved.

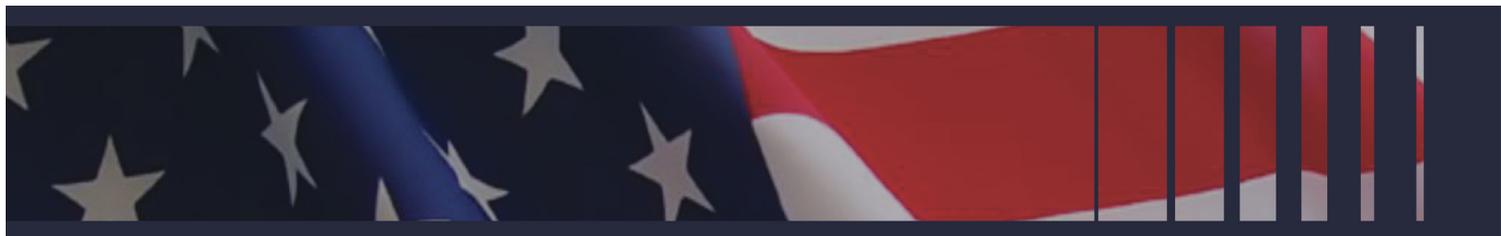

CRIMINAL PROVISIONS FOR TRAFFICKERS

Under the human trafficking and promoting prostitution of a minor CSEC laws, a convicted trafficker could face 1–20 years imprisonment and a possible fine up to $15,000, and is subject to asset forfeiture and racketeering laws. The use of the Internet to persuade, entice, or coerce a minor under 16 to engage in prostitution is a separate felony. Employing a minor in an obscene performance is a felony punishable by 10–25 years imprisonment and a possible fine up to $10,000. Aggravated sexual assault of a minor, which includes committing certain CSEC offenses against minors under 13, is a felony punishable by 25–50 years imprisonment and a possible fine up to $20,000. Victim restitution may be ordered as part of sentence for any crime and a victim can bring a civil claim against a trafficker for damages. A trafficker is required to register as a sex offender for convictions of CSEC crimes, but not for sex trafficking. Parental rights may be terminated for a conviction of sexual assault resulting in the conception of a child, but not for human trafficking or CSEC convictions.

PROTECTIVE PROVISIONS FOR THE CHILD VICTIMS

Connecticut law provides for the development of programs for responses and services to victims of human trafficking, though not child sex trafficking specifically. Minors under 16 are immune from prosecution for violations of prostitution. Minors 16 and older receive a presumption of coercion, but minors ages 16-17 could still enter the juvenile justice system as delinquents. Upon arrest of any child for a violation of prostitution, an officer is required to report suspected abuse or neglect to the Department of Children and Families. A victim found to be abused or neglected—a definition which includes sexual exploitation, but not expressly victimization by human trafficking or CSEC—might receive protection through child protective services. Yet, the definitions of guardian and “person responsible for the health, welfare or care of a child or youth” do not expressly include those without legal custody of a minor to make the definition applicable to traffickers and allow child protective services intervention. State crime victims’ compensation maintains eligibility criteria that victims of domestic minor sex trafficking might find to be barriers to recovery. A crime must be reported to police within five days of the commission of the crime or within five days of when a report could reasonably be made; victims must file a claim within two years, though a minor may apply for a waiver if the failure to apply was not the minor’s fault. While these eligibility requirements are waived for victims of sexual assault, they are not waived for sex trafficking or CSEC victims. Connecticut’s victim-friendly criminal justice procedures are limited. The “rape shield” law, which reduces the trauma of cross-examination for testifying victims, does not extend to child victims of sex trafficking or CSEC crimes. Only minor victims of sexual assault or abuse under 12 may testify via closed circuit television. A minor may file a petition to expunge criminal records once the following criteria are attained: reaching age 17, two years have elapsed since convicted, no proceedings are pending against the child, and the child has not been subsequently convicted of a crime. Civil remedies are specifically available for damages resulting from human trafficking but not for other CSEC crimes, and victim restitution is available. A prosecution for human trafficking deemed an offense of sexual exploitation against a minor must be brought within the earlier of 30 years after the minor reaches 18 or five years after the date the victim notifies law enforcement of the offense. Civil actions related to sexual exploitation must be brought within 30 years after the victim reaches 18, while other civil actions must be brought within three years of the crime.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE TOOLS FOR INVESTIGATION AND PROSECUTIONS

Connecticut has developed a training program on trafficking in persons, although it is not statutorily mandated. State law requires two-party consent to record telephone communications. Wiretapping is not expressly authorized for trafficking investigations, though it is authorized for felonious crimes of violence which may include child sex trafficking or CSEC. No law expressly authorizes the use of a decoy in the investigation of prostitution or sex trafficking cases, but law enforcement may use the Internet to investigate offenses of enticing a minor, which includes enticing a minor under 16 to engage in prostitution. Connecticut maintains a statewide clearinghouse on missing children, and requires reporting and maintaining information on missing children, but not specifically reporting located children.

CRIMINAL PROVISIONS FOR FACILITATORS

The state human trafficking law does not include the crime of assisting, enabling, or financially benefitting from human trafficking. Facilitators can be charged with CSEC offenses and could be in violation of racketeering laws, which can entail asset forfeiture. Promoting prostitution of a minor by profiting from the prostitution of a minor under 18, importing child pornography, and promoting a minor in an obscene performance are felonies punishable by 1–20 years imprisonment and a possible fine up to $15,000. Victim restitution may be ordered in any criminal sentence upon proof of losses. No laws in Connecticut address sex tourism.
